Introduction. Egoism and Fellow-Feeling HE kernel of the history of human development is the interaction of egoism and fellow-feeling. At certain periods egoism has been the stronger. The mere mention of the words Hellenism, Renaissance, calls up a vision of godlike figures passing in procession and filling the air with sound and colour. These periods have permanently enriched life by their profound, self-centred sense of life and surging creative joy. At other periods fellow-feeling has been predominant. Not the good fortune of the individual, but the sufferings of the many, have occupied the minds of thinkers. Periods of powerful conflict arise, when both egoism and fellow-feeling have found forcible expression. Our time is one of these. On the one hand we have a Tolstoy, whose fellow-feeling led him to a remedy for human suffering...
