If this be done the water collects along the edge in contact with the shelf, and consequently this part dries very slowly and seems to attract all the dust in the room. The best thing on which to rest the plate is a strip of corrugated card or packing paper about an inch wide. A Sponge Brush.--This is an exceedingly useful contrivance for damping paper previous to mounting on card for home-made mounts. It is also an excellent tool for applying starch paste to large prints when mounting. It is also useful for wiping round the edges of prints when some superfluous mount has oozed out. The thing simply consists of a piece of fine grain Turkey sponge stuffed half way into the neck of a squat bottle. Its points are that it can be cleaned in a moment, that it does not give streaks as a hard brush does, and that by using the bottle as a brush handle we can keep our fingers dry. A very convenient form of bottle for the purpose is an old gum bottle of more or less conical form with a good broad base. To prevent Mounts Curling or Cockling.--The curling of the mount under a photographic print is due to laying on the dry mount a wet and therefore expanded paper print. When the print dries and, of course, shrinks, it must either part company with the mount, or curl...
